Read the passage and answer the questions that follow:

High-altitude climbing is still a very dangerous task in spite of the availability of oxygen masks and other protective equipment which modern climbers take with them. These, of course, are indispensable accessories of climbing, but more important than these is the stamina of the climber, which ultimately determines the success of his attempt. Throughout his journey, death is his constant companion that he can keep at a distance only with his superb presence of mind. He has to tread every inch of the ground with the utmost care, for a false step may not only deal him a fatal blow but also bring disaster to the whole expedition. That is why all expeditions invariably take with them local guides who are experienced climbers and who have a thorough knowledge of the terrain. Moreover, a huge amount of capital is needed for financing these expeditions, and this is generally provided by governments or wealthy private organizations.

The primary objective of a mountaineering expedition is to reach the top of a high mountain, which in the past has resisted all attempts to conquer it. But it should not be presumed that the expedition is a complete failure if it does not reach its destination. Sometimes operations are temporarily suspended because of the loss of some valuable equipment or the sudden death of a very important member of the party. Every major expedition includes men who are interested in botany, geology, zoology, and various other branches of science, and these men carry equipment for recording their observations concerning the weather, the terrain, and different forms of life in higher altitudes. Other scientists, explorers, and expeditionists utilize the fruits of their observations. Thus, every unsuccessful expedition contributes to the success of later expeditions. The British expedition led by Colonel Hunt would have found their way to Everest much more difficult had earlier expeditions not armed them with useful knowledge about the death-dealing weather they had to encounter near the summit.

To ordinary people, mountaineering need not be a fearful journey in the land of snowstorms, where the brave adventurer is always coming face to face with death. They can scale less ambitious heights, rest their weary limbs under a quiet shelter, and feast their eyes on the distant landscape. In the company of friends, they can enjoy an outing near a waterfall or cross into the next valley with haversacks full of provisions dangling from their shoulders. All those who can afford to go to a hill station should seek this innocent pleasure, for it can be had without any risk to life or limb.

1. What is the primary reason expeditions hire local guides, according to the passage?
 - a. They carry the heavy equipment needed for the climb.
 - b. They are physically stronger than foreign climbers.
 - c. They are familiar with the terrain and experienced in climbing.
